<h3>

Life is short make it sweet in our Foodie_House

</h3>

From the very beginning, you must find out your target audience.

If there is a university near your restaurant, students and teachers will be your regulars. If there is a business centre nearby, business executives will visit your place often. So check your surroundings, age group, and their preference to find out your target audience.

Once you define your target audience, you can start the creation of your restaurant website. If your restaurant website is for students, opt for a bright design. But if it is to attract business people, pick an elegant or professional style.

You can also include “happy hours” or other discounts to draw customers. You can create a separate page, slider image or pop-up to give details.

Here are a few websites that have mentioned happy hours to keep their customers well-informed.
